> A Companion's Calendar. The Youth's Companion has just published a calendar for 1895 which is a work of art-indeed, three works of art in one. Scene typical of three seasons of the year, winter, summer, autum, are show. The first -picture represents a mother and son pausing in their walk in a snowy field, across which a rabbit is running, much to the amusement of the boy.

The artist in the summer scene has pictured three children rowing down a winding river; and were it not for the apples which fill the pan in her arms, one would scarce imagine that that the graceful girl in the third picture was tipical of autum. Around the pictures are grouped the monthly calendars, tied together by ribbons.

This attractive calendar and a full Prospectus for 1895 will be sent free upon application to any one considering a subscription to The Companion. From no other paper can so much entertainment and instruction be obtained for so little money, (only $1.75 a year.) If you subscribe now you will receive the paper until January I, 1895, and for a full year from that Democracy comes high, but the date, including the Thanksgiving, people must have it. SAVED FROM HIS LOVE.

Reginald Vaughan, journalist, was smoking a solitary midnight pipe in his chambers when there was a knock at the door. He looked up without rising from his chair. "Hullo, Ensor!" he said, "come in. Where have you been?"

His visitor was a young man in evening dress, an old Cambridge friend, and now also engaged in earning an imaginary income at the bar and an actual one by his pen. 'Been to the theater," he answered, "and thought I would look you up on my way home. Why, what's the matter with you?" he continued, as he leisurely took off his great coat, and filled a pipe. "You're looking as melancholy as if you, instead of myself, had been witnessing the performance of a modern English

The gloom on Vaughan's face deep-"That's the matter," he answered laconically, pointing to a bulky envelope which lay on his writing table.

'You don't mean to say that your editor has sent back some of your work?" said the other, as he moved toward the table. 'Worse, much worse," said

Vaughan, with infinite pathos in his 'Why, it's Mabel Lawrence's writ-

"I see; she is one of the modern young ladies who look upon literature as a pleasant alternative to crochet work. The Englishman is supposed to say: 'It is a fine day; let us kill.' The Englishwoman undoubtedly does remark: 'It is a wet day; let us create.' Hence the feminine novel; which, by the way, has almost ceased to be novel, and would scorn to be thought feminine. And so Mabel is afflicted with an attack of modernity?" "Not in the least. She is, thank goodness, quite free from that taint. She would rather read a blue book than a yellow book, I fancy. This is called a 'Domestie Drama.' Vaughan got up and drew a bulky roll of manuscript from the envel-"All the worse," said his friend. "If the stuff were only slightly immoral and wholly decadent we could place it easily enough, however badly it is written. But a wife who prefers the poetry of domestic drama to the prose of the domestic dinner table cannot be expected to provide very attractive food, bodily or men-My best advice to you, Vaughan, which I know you won't take, is to back out of your engagement as quickly as possible. She can hardly love you much if she pesters you in this way. Depend upon it, she looks upon you only as a medium whereby her productions may find their way into print." 'You're talking bosh, my dear fellow." replied Vaughan. does love me; indeed, the tragic part of is that she has written these things because she thinks that we ought to have all interests in common, and that, as she puts it, 'we shall thus be fellow workers.' stead of making jokes about it, for heaven's sake tell me what I am to do. I daren't send it back and tell her it is worthless-that would break ber heart. And yet no paper could print the stuff."

'Is it so bad as that?" asked Ensor. "I didn't knew that anyone had attained to writing down to that level in these days. Let us hear some of it."

'No; I'm not going to read it-I haven't the courage to. You can study it for yourself if you like. It is a compound of every possible fault in grammar and expression, and its story is too terribly inane." Ensor took the manuscript, glanced through a few pages, and struggled nobly to suppress his smiles, while Vaughan thrust out his legs toward the fire and smoked "Well," said Ensor at length, tossing the MS. aside, "it is certainly the most awful rubbish. Seriously, by far the kindest thing you can do is to tell the young lady frankly that she can never, by any possibility, succeed in literature. Why don't you do this?" The other shook his head mournfully. "I can't," he said. "First, she sent me some verses, worse even than this story, and those I did send back. Next came what was meant for a humorous article. That also I returned, though it made her rather angry. And, wishing to defeelings, I explained that people were so busy reading fiction in these soft hair gloves.

days that there is no market for poetry or humorous articles. It wasn't that, of course; but I thought it would serve as an innocent excuse. So now she has sent this, because I told her, she says, that there was no difficulty in finding an opening for good fiction." "Your obvious reply is that those very words condemp the chances of this precious production."

"She'd never forgive me if I said that. I must get the thing published somehow. What on earth am I to do?" His friend reflected for some minutes in silence. Then a curious smile came over his face. "Clearly, my dear Vaughan, the thing is hopeless as it stands. But if you are determined to get it published, the only way is to rewrite it entirely.' "Yes, that might do," said Vaughan, "but wouldn't Mabel be offended if we tampered with her 'Not half so much as if you simply returned it as worthless. The oy of seeing her name in print will quite atone for everything. Come along; hand me over a pencil and a piece of paper and we will start at once. We won't make more changes than are necessary, but just put a little flavoring of humor and cynicism, and brighten up the whole thing a bit, and then I'll undertake to get Johnson (of the Sentinel, you know) to publish it." "It's awfully good of you," said Vaughan. "I don't see that I can do anything else. And I can put down the necessity for the changes we make to the uneducated taste of the British public. But I'll leave the alterations to you-I haven't the heart for the work." "Very well, but don't say anything to Mabel about it till the thing is published. Just tell her that it has been accepted, and she will be perfectly happy.'

"Now I wonder," remarked Ensor to himself on his way home, "whetherthis is selfishness or altruism. Surely it is altruism, for Vaughan isn't a bad fellow, but he will hate me like poison for at least a year after this. So I am really sacrificing myself in order to prevent his marrying that atrocious girl, whose taste is as defective as her grammar. Anyhow, I'll make those alterations to-morrow, and I think, Reginald Vaughan, my boy, that they will save you from the horrors of matrimony.

Some three weeks later Vaughan found the following letter on his breakfast table:

"No. 700. QUBEN'S GATE, S. W .- Dear Mr. Vaughan: I have seen to-day the copy of the Sentinel, which contains what purports to be my story. You will hardly be surprised, I my story. You will hardly be surprised, I think, to learn that you are henceforth to consider our engagement as absolutely broken off. You will hardly be surprised, I say, for this was evidently your purpose in turning my story into ridicule, as you have done. But you might, I think, have found a more gentlemanly way of doing this. You have put vulgar comic speeches into the mouths of my pathetic characters; you have turned my hero into a cowardly cynic, and my heroine into a modern adventuress. In short, you have made me figure as the author of a disgusting, modern and wicked tale, instead of a true romance.

"Please do not trouble to answer this note; I shall burn any letters you send me unread. And the servants have orders not to admit you to this house in future. Believe me, yours to this house in future. Believe me, your Names of Japanese Ships. It is the custom of the Japanese to, add to the names of their ships of war the word Kan, a term which is of Chinese origin and means war vessel, and their warships are always spoken of in this way, as: Naniwa Kan, Hashidate Kan, etc. In a similar manuer the word Maru is added to the names of merchant vessels, as Omi Maru, Yamashiro Maru. The word is of obscure origin. It is believed to be a corruption of Maro, "an archaic term of endearment." The meaning and origin of names given to Japanese war vessels are of interest. Matsushima is one of the Sankei, or "three views of Japan," and has been famous from earliest times. It is a beautiful archipelago on the coast, which can be described in the meaning of the words: "Pinetree-Island." Ituskushima and Hashidate are islands famous for their beauty. Naniwa is the ancient name for the province in which the old capital, Kyoto, is situated.

Takachiho is a southern mountain, on the summit of which the first mikado, Jimmu Tenno, is supposed to have alighted when he descended from Heaven.

Yoshino is a wild mountainous tract of country, in which is situated a town of the same name, celebrated for its sakura (the flowering cherry) trees, said to number one thousand. Akagi and Hiyei are names of mountains. - Harper's Weekly.

On last Sunday morning two men were shot at Owensboro and both mortally wounded because somebody was drinking. And yet it is now proposed to legalize the sale of whisky in Hartford by having open saloons.

THE people of this county by a majority of over 700 said: "We will not this declaration and trample under foot the voice of the whole county?

THERE are some people in the world who if they were accused of stealing, wold fly into a fit of cyclonic rage and proceed to shake their gory locks in the face of the accuser after a fashion that would do credit to a band of Commanche Indians and yet these same folks will make a poor, yet honest, neighbor pay their taxes year after year by putting a fair estimate on the value of his property, at assessment times, while they refuse to do anything of the kind. AN EFFORT TO COUNT

JUDGE GUFFY OUT. We gather from the tenor of the Franklin Favorite, that an effort will be made to have the State Canvassing Board count Judge Guffy out, and deny him the seat on the Appellate bench, to which a majority of the voters of this district have elected him. The State Canvassing Board is composed of Gov. Brown, Secretary of State Headley, Attorney General Hendricks and Auditor Norman.

Mr. Reeves' alliance with the L. & N. R. R. is well known to the people of this district and they have put their stamp upon him in unmistakable terms. As an evidence of this in Republican counties the majorities increased, while in Democratic counties the majorities decreased, or disappeared altogether. This is very noticable in the district over which Judge Reeves has been presiding asCircuit Judge. It is a dangerous thing to thwart"vox populi"and we shall be very much mistaken if this board, made L. & N. R.R., shall count out the pure man of the people, Honorable Judge Guffy, to seat Reeves, the tool of monopolies. Judge Guffy has been

A Wise Suggestion. The Herald Wednesday morning contained the following, which is to the point, and which we heartily endorse. elected and will be s-ated.

"The court house bell has from time out of mind been recognized as an alarm of fire when rung at times other than those at which people may reasonably be expected to be at the court house for the transaction of business. When it taps at night time or in the early morning it sends a thrill of dread and fear through everybody and is particularly harrowing to nervous or sick people. For every reason it might not be needlessly rung at all sorts of hours by those who happen to be about the building during

Women Should Have More Rest. Gossiper in the Louisville Post has the following to say in regard to women taking the proper rest:

"So few women know how to rest themselves is the reason why so few women keep their good looks on into middle life. Full of nervous energy, never for a moment quiet, even when the chance comes for a respite, they go on using up their nervous system until one day comes a grand collapse and a long siege of expensive and painful illness is the result. Now, wouldn't it be much better, ye good managers, to look as carefully to your health as to your households? "What if there is a speck of dust n ested away beneath some ornament or chair leg, what if there are some tasks slighted and some others left entirely undone, the house won't go your weak way to maintain a place that would wear out a much stronger organization than human frame. "Even when you stretch yourself out on the couch for a little nap, what do you do? Obituary. On the morning of Nov. 9, 1894. the dark winged angle of death entered the home of Milton and Florence Park, and claimed from them their little son aged 6 years the very day of his death. Thus, we see little Wayne's stay on earth was but a little while but we can call to mind many, many things which those little hands have done.

Through imagination I can see him in the school-room, and on the play ground, and returning from school in evening. But no more on earth can we see that bright face. No more will we hear the steps of the little feet, he is to stay singing praises with the angels above. Sad was the scene to behold that sweet face for the last time. But "Go. knows best" and we all must submit to his holy will. Wayne has passed through the dark valley of death which valley we all must pass through and may we live so that when that trying hour shall come then we may be safely guided by our Savior and at last meet with our little school-mate who has just been called from us.

CURIOUS ARMS. Ancient Implements of War Which

Are Now Quite Obsolete. Among the arms now obsolete which formed a large part of the infantry equipment in the days when the army was started was the pike, which was in the form of a spear, with a flat and pointed head, mounted on a staff from thirteen to eighteen feet long. The firearm in general use at the time was the matchlock.

What would a sergeant major of the present day, with his men armed with the magazine rifle, think of such a weapon as this: "Attached to the lock of this musket was a pan, also a cock, the hammer of which was somewhat in the form of a bird's, serpent's or dog's head; this head was split, and a screw compressed or eased the slits. The piece being loaded first with powder and then with ball, some powder was poured into the pan; the pan was then shut to keep this 'priming' dry. When the soldier wished to fire, be fastened his burning match into the slit of the cock, opened the pan, looked to his priming, presented, and pulled the trigger; the match, falling into the powder in the pan, fired it.

Between the pan and the breach when the piece was being loaded the grains of powder were naturally rammed and shaken down close to this hole, and when priming, the soldier took care to perfect the communication of the powder in the pan with that in the barrel; thus the explosion in the pan caused the igni-Round.

An Archbishop's Robes, 1205.

In our time, when, from antiquarian curiosity or some other rea son, ancient tombs have been opened we have come face to face with longburied specimens of olden needle work. An instance occurred not long since in Canterbury cathedral, when the tomb of Hubert Walter was opened. This ecclesiastic was archbishop of Canterbury when he died in 1205. Only his bones remained when the investigation in question took place, but these lay in the vestments in which the body was interred nearly seven hundred years ago, and on these robes are various embroideries in silk and gold. The linen was found to be considerably decayed, but the amber colored silk on which the embroidery is worked is in fair preservation. This work consists of angels, the evangelists and other sacred figures arranged chiefly in roundlets. In the same cathedral may also be seen another specimen of even greater interest; this is the velvet jupon (a surcoat worn over armor) of the Black Prince, which is suspended over his tomb. It is embroidered with his arms in gold. The robes of the Saxon bishop, St. Cuthbert, in the library of Durham cathedral, are also enriched with needlework .-Chambers' Journal.

The "Man-Eater."

Lower California is the home of a species of lizard which appears to be at least a second cousin to the famed 'Gila monster." It is of a mottled yellow and brown color and only about fifteen inches long. The natives of that region have given it the terrible name of "Man-eater," because it has a habit of attacking every human being it sees-going at them open-mouthed-but does not appear to mind either wild or domestic animals. The man-eater's body is almost as brittle as that of the mythical "joint-snake."

A few days since a woman entered a certain hat store. She had in tow a boy of about ten years of age. That is, his body was ten years old, but his face looked like a man of thirty. 'I want a cheap hat for this boy. I don't care what it is so long as it is

The hatter pulled over his stock, and finally presented to the woman a hat worth about fifty cents. 'I guess this will satisfy you," he said. 'It is fifty cents.'

"All right; I'll take it. I wanted something cheap for the boy to have fits in;" and then she went out .- Syracuse Post.

Brethren Should Dwell in Unity. There is no editor in this broad land who devotes more time to the careful reading of the Holy Scriptures than Mr. Knott, of the Evening Post. Certainly none who illustrates in higher perfection those graces of the Christian character, which, like the gentle dew from heaven, bless all who come within their influence. It strikes us therefore with surprise that Editor Knott should have overlooked a lesson so seriously urged and so eloquently expressed in the words "Brethren should dwell together in unity." The language may not be a literal quotation, but the lesson is such an emphatic fact that Editor Knott should have learned and profited by it. Instead of this, we notice in his influential journal frequent illnatured flings at his elder brother, the Courier-Journal, and his younger, whom he calls the Evening Courier-Journal. This should not be, for they are all of one political faith, and leaders of that gang of mercenaries who believe in free trade, free silver, free damnation, and anything else from dropping out and to keep it that will give them a free swing at the public offices. Mrs. Eliza Christina Gibson, relict of Remus Gibson, died at her homeon Mulberry Street Tuesday night at 9 o'clock of consumption. She was born July 20, 1832, the daughter of Reason Williams. In 1850 she married Remus Gibson, who precedes her to the better world by twelve years. Since her marriage, forty-four years ago, she has been a citizen of Hartford. In 1848 she joined the Beaver Dam Baptist Church and withdrew from that body to unite in the organization of the Hartford Paptist Church in 1869. At no period of the school's history has there been more activity manifested by the students and teachers than at the present time. All are laboring to the fullest extent of their power. From early in the morning until late in the evening this continuous work goes on and all seem so delighted that they never become weary. We can't see why every one does not avail themselves of the rare opportunity that this school affords

On yesterday morning at 7:30 the Grand Jury and Petit Jury visited the college together with a large number of visitors at which time the Hon. J. E. Rowe, Owensboro delivered an address to the school in a graceful, logical, and practical manner. His subject was "Character and Moral," he showed clearly and forcibly that there could be no permanant happiness and success with out these principles, and that it was not the genius alone that attains renown but that often the mediocre with sound mind, industry and perseverance would be the ruling, co ntroling pow from time to time. The Hypatiansgive an open meeting this evening at four o'clock. No extra time has been expended in preparing the program, but any that may come will be welcome. We were especially glad to have the trustees of the school to visit us and believe they are thoroughly interested in the success and prosperity of our school, also judging from the honest intellectual appearance of the gentlemen who compose the two juries of the present Circuit Court, we believe the interest of our county will

Sunday Morning Shooting at

News reached here last Sunday about noon of the shooting of Jack Heavrin, brother to Mr. M. L. Heavrin, the well known attorney of this place. There are several conflicting reports in regard to the affray. The Messenger of Tuesday contained the following: Charles Heavrin said to a Messenger reporter: "Ashby and his friends were in our saloon near midnight drinking. One of them dancing, and we told him to stop as it was nearly Sunday and we wanted no noise. They quietly left and went to one of the houses across the road. I was out in the Highland, and met a woman who told me a man had been cut to pieces. I then heard some one laugh and run around the house. I told them it was all fun, and just then John Ashby stepped from behind a tree and raised his cane, which I thought was a billy. I ran back and told Jack that they were after me and we must not let them in. We started to the door and met Officers Stuart and Hiter, and asked protection from them. Ashby then came up to the porch and when Jack asked him what he wanted, saying we had done nothing, he drew his pistol and then Jack drew his. They began firing, and I thought everybody was shooting at once. Ashby and Jack were only a few feet apart, and when the shooting stopped Jack fell on the porch there, (pointing to the spot covered with dry blood), and Ashby friends." Jack was carried into his room and Dr. J. P. Heavrin was called immedia ately. He was unconscious Sunday and passed the night under opiates. He was no better last night and his recovery is doubtful. Dr. Heavrin says he may recover if he is well taken care of, but his chances are slim.

Ashby was taken to his father's home at Fourth and Hathaway street. A bullet entered his right breast, pierced the lung and has not been located. He is suffering terribly but rested easy Sunday night. He cannot recline, experiences difficulty in talking very much, and has not eaten anything. Drs. Told and Fowlkes are attending him and will express no definite opinion on his chances of recovery, but his nurses and close friends say he cannot pull through. When a reporter called at his house at 12:30 this morning, Ashby was asleep and apparently resting well, but he was no better than yesterday when he was reported worse than Sunday. Heavrin was also seen and was resting well. He said he felt somewhat better than he did Monday morning. He stated that Ed Orkies who first stepped upon the porch, and that Ashby came up shooting without warning. He had told his brother to run, and when so many shots were fired he turned to see if his brother was shot. As he did so, a bullet grazed his little finger, another went through the right lappel of his coat, one through the muscle of his left arm, and one entered his left breast, came out under the shoulder and dropped down in his sock. The first shot fired took his left forefinger off, making five balls that struck him. He says Ashby fired most, if not all, the shots that struck him and a deputy sheriff said one of Ashby's party told him that he emptied his pistol and ran."

There are fifteen bullet holes in the side of Heavrin's house. There are holes made by 32 and 38 calibre balls, and some larger ones, presumably of 48-calibre. Ashby's friends will not give their side of the story, but say Heaverin's is not true.

Yes, I am sure that others sell besides negroes; some for money, some for office and others for popularity. I thank God, the negroes are not guilty

The new infantry rifle is similar to the arm now used by the Danish government, but so altered and improved as to make it the best magazine gun for army use now known. The Krag-Jorgensen or United States infantry rifle, model 1892, is a magazine gun with a caliber of .30 of an inch, or .15 of an inch smaller than that of the Springfield rifle now in use. The new rifle is slightly shorter than the Springfield. The breech is opened and closed by a sliding bolt operated by a handle and knob at its rear end. The magazine is a horizontal one, lying under the receiver of the barrel, and closed by a gate at its right side. Part of the barrel, where it is grasped by the left hand in firing, is covered with wood. This is necessary, for the barrel becomes very hot from the extreme rapidity of fire. The handle at the rear end of the bolt, and a skirts of Washington, Ind. There lug at its front end, fit into grooves he stopped his horse and after imand lock the bolt when the breech is closed. On its exterior the bolt carries the extractor, while inside is the firing pin and spiral mainspring. The magazine holds five cartridges, which are pressed forward by means of a follower acted upon by a spring, so that the cartridges are placed one by one in front of the bolt. The magazine can be instantly filled from a "quick-loading" box holding five cartridges. When the bolt is drawn to the rear, the cartridge just fired is withdrawn by the hook of the extractor, and thrown clear of the gun by an ejector at the bottom of the receiver. At the same time a fresh cartridge from the magazine is placed in front of the bolt. The bolt is then shoved forward, placing the cartridge in the barrel, and at the same time cocking the firing pin, so that the piece is ready for firing. On the left side of the piece is a 'cut-off," by means of which the cartridges in the magazine can be held in reserve until the proper moment, and in the meantime the piece can be used as a single-loader. The cartridges are bottle-shaped. The bullet weighs only half as much as that of the Springfield, and is fired with nearly double the muzzle velocity, giving greater range and accuracy. The powder used is of the smokeless variety, so as not to obscure the view of the soldier and not to obstruct the small bore of the gun. The bayonet is simply a long knife, so that it is useful off as well as on

One important feature of the new rifle is that in one minute's time, without the assistance of any tools, it can be completely taken apart, any broken part replaced, and then it can as quickly be put together again.—Harper's Weekly.

SUGAR A REMEDY. It Will Cure Hiccoughs Where Other

Things Fail. "Why don't you stop that hiccoughing?" asked a man of a friend, who was convulsed with the annoying convulsions in the street near the Astor house the other day. "Stop them?" gulped the other, "I-I-wish I could. Held my breath-fifteen minutes-drank nine swallows-water; nine times. Tried to-scare myself; make believelost my watch. No good. They won't go.

"Will you buy if I cure them for you?" asked the first speaker, laughing at the frequent interruptions in his friend's description of his troubles. The other gasped in the affirmative reply, and the two entered the rotunda.

"Give this man a heaping barspoonful of powdered sugar," said the friend to the barkeeper. The man did so. "Now swallow it," continued the speaker to the victim of hiccoughs. Do Fordsville People Know Any thing About the Affair?

A very pretty girl nineteen years of age, accompanied by a brakeman on the L., St. L. and T. railroad, walked into the Charity Organization yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock and asked to be sent home to her parents in Flora, Ind. She told Dr. Hawes a long and tall story about now she had been kidnapped two months ago and been held a prisoner in fear of her life up to a few days ago. She said her name was Lauretta E. Dennan, and that she lived with her father Moses Denman and her mother in Flora, Ind to the night of September 28. On that night she and her parents, she said, attended a temperance lecture in one of the churches at Floria, The lecture was over at o o'clock and her parents went directly home She. however stopped at the house of a triend until near 11 o'clock. The distance between her own home and her friend's home was so start that she started home by herself. She was just opening the gate at her home, she said, when she was sudde ly seized by a man from behind, a handkerchiel was thrust into her mouth and she was then lifted into a buggy which was concealed behind some shrubbery near by. The man, whom she recognized as named Thomas, she said, got into the buggy with her, and telling her if she dared to raise an outcry be would surely kill her, drove rapidly to the woods about a mile out from Floria. He told her, she said, that he proposed to take her away from Floria where no one would ever knew them and kept her in hidden until she promised to marry him.

He also to'd her she said, that he had broken into her home while the family was away, gathered up all of her clothes and hidden them in the woods near by The horse's head had been turned in the lirection of these woods, and after a ride of a mile they reached them. Thomas, she said, drove directily to an old hollow tree, and, ofter first warning her not to leave the buggy got out and pulled a bundle of clothing from the hollow in the This he threw into the back of the buggy, and climbing in turned the horse round and began to drive south. The young woman said Thomas drove fourteen nights and two days until he reached the outout up at an old cabin owned by an Henry Johnson They stopped at this cabin for the night only and the next morning they crossed the river here at Louisville, she said, and drove on to Owensboro, where they put up again this time for a week and with relatives of Thomas named Chapman. At the end of the week, Thomas, the said, concluded that it would not do to stay with people who knew him, so he notified her to be ready to leave that night. She was afraid to disobey him, she sail, so that night when the whole fundy was asleep she and Thomas stole out of the house, and taking their hirse and buggy proceeded on to Fordsville, Olio county. Here lands, who still clung to the name of Johnson, fell in with a farmer named Wallice. He learned that Wallace had a far a near another village in Ohio county that he wished to sell. Thomas concludel to settle on a farm so the two made a trade and the farm passed in to Thomas' hands. The girl sail she and Thomas went to housekeeping then. He introluced her to every one as Mrs Johnson, and kept her ander strict watch so that she could not get a chance to tell any one her story. He never left her out of his sight for longer than a half hour, she Two days ago, however, he told her he was coming to Louisville on business, and put her in charge of the Wallace family. Thomas was hardly out of sight, she said, when she told her whole story to Mr. Wallace. He at once gave her money enough to bring her on to Louisville. When she reached Union station she was out of money and asked a policeman where she could stay. The officer put her in charge of the brakeman who took her to the Charity Organization. Upon further questioning she said Thomas was married and had lived with his mother who was very wealthy and who had a farm about five miles out of Flora. She had known Thomas before he kidnipped her, she said, but had never had anything to do with him. She said she believed he had gone back to Flora. When Dr. Hawes seemed to question some of the girl's statements she grew very dramatic, and, lifting her hands, cried: "I'don't care what you think about it, I know that every bit of what I say is true." Dr. Hawes could do nothing for the girl without first investigating her story, so he got the brakeman who brought her less -- [Saturday's Courier-Journal.

MAKING PINS.

Are Made by Machinery.

The Operation is Quite Different from What It Was in the Sixteenth Century -Complicated Mackines That Turn

Out Two Hundred a Minute. When pins were first invented, some time during the third decade of the sixteenth century, it took one man a whole day to make two dozen, the market price of the day's output being but three shillings. Even as late in the present century as 1838 one pin went through the hands of twelve persons before it was finished and folded away in the little sheet of paper of the regulation green. Today, however, everything is different in the pin factory, a single machine turning out a stream of the little, neatly-polished, sharp-pointed implements at the rate of two hundred per minute, day and night.

This wonderful little pin-making automaton is not larger than a sewing machine, but it has more invisible knives, springs, sharpeners and pinchers about it than a steam thrasher. The wire from which the pins are made is coiled around a small drum attached to the rear end of the machine, different sizes of wire and pinchers being used for the several varieties of pins. The wire passes from the drum into the machine through a small hole provided for that purpose, being kept straight and taut by a brake on the drum and a series of iron pegs across the platform of the machine. A queer little pair of pinchers - "catchers" - seizes the wire and thrusts it through a hole, where it is held while a small hammer beats a head on the forward end of the wire.

Here it is held until a knife descends and cuts the wire in proper pin length. Next it is allowed to drop into a groove through which the heads cannot pass, and while being held in that position is exposed to the action of a set of small files, which almost instantly give it a smooth, sharp point. The pin is now finished and ready for the polishing tub, which is simply a revoling barrel in which the pins are cleaned and polished by their own friction. After going through the polishing tub they are boiled in a solution of acid and tin. This latter operation gives them their shining appearance. After going through the acid bath they are accounted as being finished and ready for the market .- Mechanic.

GANDER AND EAGLE. The Latter Finally Met His Match in the Former. There are few better fighters than a goose, or a gander more particularly. Those ragged white Russian geese bite like bulldogs. It is no mere peck with them; they bite and hang on. The common old farmyard gander is a capital fighter when he is driven to it. At a certain place old woman whom Thomas called Miss in Scotland there used to be a caged Waltz. He gave his name to her as golden eagle. He preferred to kill his own dinner, and it used to be a cruel sport to watch him dispose of any unfortunate hen or guinea fowl that was put into his cage.

They tried him, I believe, with every sort of domestic poultry. Ducks, peafowl, turkeys - the eagle was master of them all. He had no trouble in finishing them off, no trouble even with the 'bubbly-jock.' But at length they tried him with a gander; but he could make nothing of it. The gander crouched into a corner, drew back his head, and presented nothing but a broad, spadelike bill from whichever quarter the eagle tried to attack him.

The eagle fumed and fretted, and grew very angry; he made desperate attempts to take the gander in the flank, but the wise old bird defeated them all. In the end they had to give the gander his liberty, as the reward of his courage, and to satisfy the eagle with the much more succulent dainty of a young turkey poult. -Macmillan's Magazine.
